What, love a passion! Heaven forbid,
That man should call true love by such a name,
Passion is but the creature of an hour
A glowing ember, a bright, short lived flame;
A fire, kindled from a tiny spark,
Glowing and live, but soon the brightness wanes;
Colder and paler still, the embers grow
Till nought but ashes, of the fire remains.

No passion lives for ever; so
True love is not a passion I contend,
Love is, a mutual affinity
A strong affection 'twixt two souls that blend,
Placid and pure, and deep as is the sea
Love can make two souls one in heart, in thought,
And love comes not at will; it is not hired,
Cannot be sold, neither can it be bought.

What, love a passion! Heaven forbid,
That man should call true love by such a name,
Passion is but the creature of an hour
A glowing ember, a bright, short lived flame;
A fire, kindled from a tiny spark,
Glowing and live, but soon the brightness wanes;
Colder and paler still, the embers grow
Till nought but ashes, of the fire remains.

No passion lives for ever; so
True love is not a passion I contend,
Love is a mutual affinity
A strong affection 'twixt two souls that blend,
Placid and pure, and deep as is the sea
Love can make two souls one in heart, in thought,
And love comes not at will; it is not hired,
Cannot be sold, neither can it be bought.

A mystic power, unfathomed still,
Which baffles all the probing powers of man
Potent, enthralling, it shapes men's destinies,
And silent ruled since first the world began:
Heav'ns greatest gift, love is the source of life
Which sweetens all the bitterness and pain;
And ever points toward the divine love
Beside which, human love is poor and vain.

– Beatrice Chilcott.
Wesley Band of Hope.